ANNEX

Background of the Project

In 1974 the Government appointed an Educational Reform Committee to conduct a comprehensive survey of education in Thailand, with a view to redress problems related to inequality of educational opportunity, low quality of teaching, lack of teaching/learning materials for both in- and out-of-school education and inefficiencies in the organisation, management and administration of the education sector.

The Committee proposed a series of fundamental changes in 1975, many of which were incorporated in the Fourth Development Plan (1977-81). These changes feature a new school structure, a plan for improving the efficiency of educational administration, new curricula for primary and secondary education designed to redress problems of quality and equity, and expanded use of different mass media for both in- and out-of-school education purposes, which include vocational training and literacy.

In 1979 the Government obtained an IDA credit for implementing a multi-purpose education project

* Subject to approval of funds

(Thailand Education V). The total credit amounts to $US70.3 million and one of the components of Thailand Education V Project is Radio Education through the Strengthened Centre for Educational Technology and an Educational Radio Network for which $US28.6 million will be allocated.

The World Bank's cost benefit justification for investment in education radio states that radio affords an effective use of scarce resources (i.e. good teachers and good programmes) in delivering education and training to learners at relatively low costs per capita. The medium could be particularly effective in assisting teachers to introduce a new curriculum, in giving direct classroom instruction in core subjects such as language, and in providing continuing education for out-of-school target groups.

In order to achieve this potential, the Government has decided to strengthen educational media services, in particular through:

- (i) relocation and expansion of the CET, including the provision of a central facility for radio production consisting of five studios, individual control rooms, supporting equipment and materials, and radio receivers and receiver-recorders for in-school use;
- (ii) three regional production studios for out-of-school programming at Lampang, SongKlah and Ubonrajthani;
- (iii) materials and duplicating equipment for tapes to be utilised for radio courses provided by the Radio-Correspondence Project unit in the Department of Non-Formal Education, and by the In-Service Teacher Training Division in the Teacher Training Department, of the Ministry of Education;
- (iv) a national educational radio network (NERN) for transmitting educational programmes through II transmitter stations; and
- (v) related technical assistance.

Although Thailand has had more than twenty-five years of experience with educational radio, coverage has been limited and uneven. There is lack of specialised expertise in such decisive or innovative aspects as media management, the design of multi-media teaching/learning systems, and the production of instructional materials, even radio itself. For this purpose, four experts, including the CTA and eight consultants, specialists in various fields are foreseen under the technical assistance component of this project, which will be funded by UNDP.

National Character of the Project

Operational projects, benefiting from UNESCO Assistance are national projects and it is up to the beneficiary country to assume responsibility for directing the project as well as ensuring its proper implementation.

It is understood that within the outline of activities defined in the project document, the national responsibility will include the use of equipment including furniture and vehicles provided under the project.

As a result, the international specialist will carry out the tasks entrusted to him under the responsibility of the National Director of the Project or other person designated by him.

Being a UNESCO staff member, the specialist will, however, be under the authority of the Director-General of the Organisation and will, therefore, be directly responsible to him for the manner in which he carries out his functions.
