COMMONWEALTH OF AUSTRALIA

Health Insurance Act 1973

STATEMENT UNDER SECTION 106AA

ON the fourth day of March 1986, I, NEAL BLEWETT, Minister of State for Health, made a Determination under section 106 of the Health Insurance Act 1973 in respect of Dr Iain Hamilton Ping of 527A Tapleys Hill Road, Fulham, South Australia.

Particulars of Determination

A copy of the Determination is at Attachment 'A'.

Reasons for Determination

The Determination was made in accordance with a report made under sections 104 and 105 of the Health Insurance Act 1973 by the Medical Services Committee of Inquiry for the State of South Australia, after its inquiry into the practice of Dr Ping.

The Committee was of the opinion that, in respect of the patients under reference, certain of the services were excessive as they were not reasonably necessary for the adequate medical care of the patients concerned.

Accordingly, the Committee recommended that Dr Ping be reprimanded, that he be counselled, and that a total sum of $4326.20 representing Medicare benefits paid by the Commonwealth of Australia in respect of the services which the Committee considered to be excessive, be paid by Dr Ping.

Comments

The Government is seriously concerned by the practice of doctors like Dr Ping who provide services which are not reasonably necessary for the adequate medical care of the patients concerned. Excessive services are a drain on public funds and every effort is being made to reduce the magnitude of the problem.

Dated this twenty-third day of December 1986.

account shall not be written back in the light of subsequent events.

Disclosure of research and development information

- .60 The accounts and group accounts shall disclose if material -
- (a) the amount of research and development costs charged to the profit and loss account during the financial year before crediting any related grants;
 - (b) the amount of research and development costs incurred during the financial year and deferred to future financial years before crediting any related grants;
 - (c) the amount of deferred research and development costs at the end of the financial year, with accumulated amortisation charges being shown separately as a deduction therefrom; and
 - (d) the basis for amortising any deferred research and development costs.

COMMENTARY

Activities to be identified as research and development

(i) This accounting standard provides a broad definition of research and development to assist in the classification of research and development activities. It should be noted that research and development includes research work in the social sciences and humanities as well as the physical sciences. The basic principle to apply is that if the plan or design of the product (which is defined to include product, service, process or technique) is substantially set, subsequent activities are likely to be in the nature of production or pre-production activities.

(ii) The following are examples of activities that typically are included in research and development -

- (a) research aimed at discovery of new knowledge;

- (b) searching for applications of new research findings or other knowledge;
 - (c) formulation and design of possible new or significantly improved product alternatives;
 - (d) testing in search of new or significantly improved product alternatives;
and
 - (e) evaluation of new or significantly improved product alternatives.
- (iii) The following are examples of activities that typically are included in research and development, where they are carried on for a purpose directly related to research and development activities specified in (ii) -
- (a) design, construction, and testing of pre-production prototypes and models;
 - (b) design of tools, jigs, moulds and dies;
 - (c) design, construction, and operation of a pilot plant that is not of a scale economically feasible for commercial production; and,
 - (d) "feedback research and development" directed at problem solving occurring beyond the research and development phase, for example, solving technical problems arising during initial test production runs.
- (iv) The following are examples of activities that typically are excluded from research and development -
- (a) standard engineering follow-through (in an early phase of commercial production) not in the nature of activities described in sub-paragraph (iii)(d);
 - (b) quality control during commercial production, including routine testing of products;
 - (c) "trouble-shooting" in connection with break-downs during commercial production;
 - (d) routine, on-going efforts to refine, enrich or otherwise improve upon the qualities of an existing product, for example, the making of cosmetic modifications;
 - (e) adaptation of an existing capability to a particular requirement or customer's need as part of a continuing commercial activity;
 - (f) seasonal or other periodic design changes to existing products;
 - (g) routine design of tools, jigs, moulds, and dies;

- (h) activities, including design and construction engineering, related to the construction, relocation, rearrangement, or start-up of facilities or equipment (including trial and production runs) other than facilities or equipment whose sole use is for a particular research and development project;*
- (i) routine data collection, except where such activities are part of the research and development process;*
- (j) preparing for teaching; and*
- (k) routine or promotional market research, market testing or market development, or sales promotion (including consumer surveys).*

Elements of costs to be identified with research and development activities

(v) The cost of materials and services consumed in research and development activities, and the salaries, wages and other related costs of personnel, to the extent that they are engaged in research and development activities, are included as research and development costs. Where other entities have incurred costs on research and development activities on behalf of the company or group and have charged the company or group for reimbursement, such costs also are included as research and development costs. In addition, those other costs that can be attributed to research and development activities and identified with specific projects are included. Donations made to other entities such as research institutes are not research and development costs.

(vi) The costs of the service potential of assets consumed in research and development activities are included as research and development costs. This includes the depreciation of equipment and facilities to the extent that they are used for research and development activities, and the amortisation of patents and licences to the extent that they are related to research and development activities.

Research

(vii) Research activities can be segregated into two types - basic research and applied research.

(viii) Basic research can be broadly defined as original investigation directed primarily towards the advancement of knowledge. It is undertaken without a specific practical aim or application and, consequently, there rarely exists any relationship between costs incurred on these activities and resulting future benefits. The costs of basic research would normally be charged to the profit and loss account when incurred.

(ix) Applied research can be broadly defined as original investigation directed primarily towards solving recognised practical problems. Unlike basic research it is undertaken with a specific practical aim or application. Normally, at the time costs are incurred on applied research activities, any future benefits are too uncertain to warrant deferral of the costs. Thus, the costs of applied research activities would normally be charged to the profit and loss account when incurred. However, because applied research activities are undertaken with specific practical objectives they may, on rare occasions, be associated with identifiable projects and a discernible relationship may exist between these projects and probable future benefits from a successfully marketed product or service or a successful process. In these cases, if the costs of applied research activities meet the test outlined in clause .31 they are deferred and amortised over future financial years.

Development

(x) Development activities are undertaken with specific commercial objectives and involve the translation of research findings and other scientific knowledge into plans or designs for new products or for significant improvements to existing products. These activities can be associated with identifiable projects and there may be a reasonable probability of future benefits, whether in the form of increased revenues or reduced costs, arising from such projects. Thus, development costs will meet the test for deferral more often than will research costs.

(xi) The likelihood of future benefits arising from particular development projects will vary, depending on the type of project and the prospects for commercial success. In those cases where the expected future benefits are too uncertain to justify carrying the expenditure forward, the costs are treated as an expense and charged to the profit and loss account as incurred.

Amortisation of deferred research and development costs

(xii) The amount of any deferred research and development costs is to be amortised over financial years in order to match such costs with related benefits. Amortisation will commence with the commercial production of the product and the basis of amortisation employed is to be determined by reference to the benefits expected to arise from the sale or use of the product.

Accounting treatment of government or other grants received in relation to costs incurred in research and development

(xiii) Where government or other grants are received or receivable by a company or group as reimbursement for costs incurred on research and development activities, the accounting treatment of such grants depends on the accounting treatment of the costs incurred. Where the costs are deferred, the grant is deducted from the carrying amount of the asset. Where the costs have been charged to the profit and loss account the grant is credited to the profit and loss account.

Accounting for revaluations

.20 Subject to clause .21 -

- (a) the carrying amount of a non-current asset shall not be changed by revaluation except as part of a revaluation of the class of non-current assets to which it belongs;
- (b) the carrying amount of a class of non-current assets shall not be changed by revaluation unless the assets within that class -

 - (ii) are revalued at approximately the same date;
- (c) the carrying amount of a non-current asset revalued as part of the revaluation of a class of non-current assets shall not be decreased by revaluation except where the asset's recoverable amount is less than the carrying amount and it is decreased to the asset's recoverable amount.

For endorsed comment see:

Paragraph (vi): Constraints on revaluations

- .23 Where the carrying amount of a non-current asset is to be changed upwards or downwards as a result of a revaluation of a class of non-current assets in which it is included, any accumulated depreciation existing in respect of that asset at the date of the revaluation shall be credited to the asset account to which it relates. The asset account shall then be increased or decreased by the amount of the revaluation increment or decrement.

For endorsed comment see:

Paragraphs (vii) to (ix): Treatment of accumulated depreciation

- .24 Revaluation increments and decrements shall not be offset, except within a class of non-current assets.

- .25 The net revaluation increment or decrement resulting from a revaluation of a class of non-current assets shall be accounted for as follows -

- (a) an increment shall be credited directly to an asset revaluation reserve - except that, to the extent that such an increment reverses a revaluation decrement previously charged to the profit and loss account in respect of that same class, it shall be credited to the profit and loss account for the financial year; and
- (b) a decrement shall be debited to the profit and loss account - except that, to the extent that such a decrement reverses a revaluation increment previously credited to, and still included in the balance of, an asset revaluation reserve in respect of that same class, it shall be debited directly to that revaluation reserve.

- .26 The revaluation decrement resulting from a revaluation of a non-current asset to recoverable amount shall be debited to the profit and loss account - except that, to the extent such a decrement reverses a revaluation increment previously credited to, and still included in the balance of an asset revaluation reserve, it shall be debited directly to that revaluation reserve.

For endorsed comment see:

Paragraphs (iv) - (v): Reversals of previous revaluations

Sale of revalued assets

- .30 The gain or loss on sale of a previously revalued non-current asset shall be determined as the difference between the carrying amount of the asset at the time of sale and the net proceeds from the sale of that asset, and shall be brought to account in determining the profit or loss for the financial year in which disposal of the asset occurs.

Disclosure of revaluation policies

- .40 Where a class of non-current assets, or, in accordance with clause .21, a non-current asset not revalued as part of a class of non-current assets, has been revalued, the accounts or group accounts shall include a summary description of -
- (a) the year of the revaluation;
 - (b) the basis of the revaluation;
 - (c) whether the revaluation was a directors' valuation or an independent valuation;
 - (d) where the accounts or group accounts are the first in which reference is made to a valuation referred to in sub clause (c), the name of the person who made that valuation; and
 - (e) whether the valuation was made in accordance with a policy of regular revaluation of that class of non-current assets and if so, particulars of that policy and the period between revaluations.
- .41 The description "at market value" included in the accounts or group accounts in respect of investments quoted on a stock market is deemed to be sufficient compliance with clause .40(a), (b), (c) and (d).

*For endorsed comment on clauses .40 and .41 see:
Paragraphs (x) - (xii): Disclosure of revaluation policies*

COMMENTARYConsistency of valuation within a class of non-current assets

(i) This accounting standard provides that if a non-current asset is to be revalued upwards all assets in the class of non-current assets must be revalued on a consistent basis at approximately the same time. If a non-current asset is to be revalued downwards all assets in that class must be revalued unless the asset is revalued to its recoverable amount.

Class of non-current assets

(ii) Underpinning the above approach is the definition of "class of non-current assets" in paragraph .10. Non-current assets are to be classified according to their nature or function in the business of the company. Clause 12 of Schedule 7 to the Companies Regulations, without limiting the classes which may be disclosed, specifies classes of, inter alia, non-current assets. "Non-current assets" are assets which are not "current assets". "Current assets" are cash or other assets that would in the ordinary course of business be consumed or converted within 12 months after balance date (see definition Schedule 7, clause 1.)

Note: In ASRB Release 100 the following assumption relating to the concept of "asset" has been tentatively adopted:

The "assets" of an entity are economic resources which have been obtained as a result of past transactions or events and to which that entity has legal rights.

(iii) In the preparation of group accounts the definition of class of non-current assets applies to individual companies within the group and not to the group as a single entity.

Reversals of previous revaluations

(iv) This accounting standard requires that, in respect of a class of non-current assets, reversals of previous revaluations are, as far as possible, to be accounted for by entries which are the reverse of those bringing the previous revaluations to account. For example, where a revaluation decrement, in respect of a class of assets, reverses a previous revaluation increment (or cumulative increment) in respect of that same class, it is debited to the asset revaluation reserve previously credited. Any excess over the previous revaluation increment (or cumulative increment) is then debited to the profit and loss account.

(v) A complication in following this approach arises when the earlier revaluation increment credited to the asset revaluation reserve has been utilised, for example, for a bonus share issue. In the example given in paragraph (iv) it is necessary to limit the debiting of the revaluation decrement to the asset revaluation reserve to the balance of the previous revaluation increment (for the particular class of asset) remaining in that reserve. In practice some difficulties could occur in identifying exactly what that balance is, and it may be necessary to resort to practical procedures (e.g. by applying a first-in-first-out rule to revaluation increments).

Constraints on revaluations

(vi) This accounting standard is concerned with how to account for revaluations, rather than when they should occur and on what basis they should be carried out. However, there are constraining factors that are to be borne in mind. The Code (Section 269(7)(c)) imposes a duty on directors in respect of the carrying amount of non-current assets. Furthermore, there is the general accounting presumption that assets are not to be carried at amounts which will not be recovered through continued use and, where applicable, disposal. In accordance with this presumption, a downwards revaluation of a non-current asset is to occur when, and only when, the carrying amount of that asset exceeds its recoverable amount. Additionally, the provisions of Section 267 of the Code, in relation to the keeping of satisfactory accounting records, imply that acceptable documentation needs to be available to support the bringing to account of revaluation increments and decrements.

Treatment of accumulated depreciation

(vii) When a class of depreciable assets is revalued the existing balances of accumulated depreciation are to be credited to the asset accounts to which they relate, and the net amount of the assets are to be restated by the appropriate change in the value of the asset. Future depreciation charges are based on the revalued carrying amount of the asset.

(viii) When a class of depreciable assets is revalued downwards, the accumulated depreciation is accounted for in the manner outlined in paragraph (vii) and not simply increased by a further credit.

(ix) A retrospective adjustment to accumulated depreciation, required as a result of a revision of the useful life or of the residual value of a depreciable asset, is not included in the definition of "revaluation" in clause .10.

Disclosure of revaluation policies

(x) This standard requires disclosure of revaluation policies adopted in the revaluation of non-current assets (including the bases and regularity of valuation). The requirements set out in clause .40 are additional to those in Approved Accounting Standard ASRB 1001: Accounting Policies - Disclosure. This means that any material changes in the bases or assumptions used must be described.

(xi) Compliance with clause .40(b) involves disclosure of whether the asset has been revalued to, say, current market buying or selling price and assumptions made in respect of the recoverable amount of the asset. Clause 20 of Schedule 7 to the Companies Regulations prescribes additional disclosure (for companies other than exempt proprietary companies) where a valuation is supported by guarantees, warranties or indemnities and there is a material difference between the carrying amount and the estimated realisable value of a non-current asset if the value were not supported.

(xii) The standard also requires disclosure of whether a valuation is an independent valuation or not and the name of the valuer in the first set of accounts after revaluation. Where the valuation is a director's valuation and that valuation cannot be attributed to a particular person or persons but is a collective valuation by directors, the requirement to name the valuer may be satisfied by stating that the directors in office at the time made the valuation.

(xiii) Listed and borrowing corporations and certain companies meeting size criteria are required to disclose in the notes to the accounts the most recent valuations made within three years of balance date of interests in land and buildings unless those values are included in the carrying amount (Schedule 7, clause 31).
