Fifth dose of poliovirus vaccine

Change to the Australian Standard Vaccination Schedule

Date of this document: 06.11.01

The Australian Technical Advisory Group on Immunisation (ATAGI) continues to review and update the Australian Standard Vaccination Schedule (ASVS) as new evidence becomes available. As a result of this ongoing review, the ATAGI has determined that the 5 dose of OPV vaccine currently recommended to be given between 15 - 18 years of age is no longer required. In order for this revision to be incorporated into the National Health and Medical Council (NHMRC) endorsed ASVS, it is necessary for this recommendation to undergo public consultation. The purpose of this paper is to enable informed public comment on the revised recommendation.

Recommendation

The fifth dose of poliovirus vaccine (OPV or IPV) at 15-18 years is not necessary and should be dropped from the schedule. (Level of evidence: Level III-3, based on epidemiological data).

Rationale

One dose of OPV produces immunity to all 3 serotypes in about 50% of recipients, and 3 doses in over 95%. Immunity is probably lifelong, particularly after a 4th or booster dose. The use of a 5th dose in Australia is based on a study which showed waning antibody levels in 12 year old Australian school children,¹ but antibodies were measured by a relatively insensitive test.

There is no epidemiological evidence that a 5th dose of OPV is necessary to prevent disease or to increase herd immunity, and it is not recommended in almost any other country. There is no 5th dose given in the USA² nor in New Zealand³, nor in many other countries in Western Europe. The whole of the Americas and the whole Western Pacific have been declared polio-free, indicating that the 5th dose is unlikely to be necessary to prevent spread.

The danger of giving a 5th dose of poliovirus vaccine is that while Australia is still using oral polio vaccine (OPV), there is a 1 in 5 million risk with each dose after the first dose of OPV that the vaccine will cause vaccine-associated paralysis (VAPP) in the recipient or a contact^{4,5}. Given an annual birth cohort of 250,000 children, the 5th dose of OPV would be expected to cause a case of VAPP in Australia once every 20 years. Although this is a low risk, the ATAGI considers it an unacceptable risk if the benefit of a 5th dose is effectively nil.
