VICTORIAWyndham City*RAAF Base Point Cook:

About 250ha, at Point Cook, being an area enclosed by a line commencing at the north east corner of the airfield boundary (approximate MGA point 302670mE 5800280mN), then south easterly via the eastern airfield boundary to a point where it changes to a south westerly direction (approximate MGA point 303230mE 5798900mN), then due south to a point where it intersects the Low Water Mark (LWM) of Port Phillip Bay, then westerly via the LWM to the western boundary of Point Cook RAAF Base (and including the pier), then northerly via the base boundary to its north west corner, then easterly via the northern boundary to the point of commencement.

CriterionValues

- (a) the place has outstanding heritage value to the nation because of the place's importance in the course, or pattern, of Australia's natural or cultural history.

The story of Point Cook, as the oldest military airbase in Australia, is an essential part of the story of the RAAF and the development of military and civil aviation in Australia.

RAAF Base Point Cook was established in 1913 by the Federal Government as Australia's first military flying school-the Central Flying School. From this modest beginning Australia became the only British dominion to set up a flying corps of its own for service during World War One, the first flying training course commencing on 17 August 1913. The corps became the Australian Flying Corps (AFC), seeing active service in Mesopotamia and on the Western Front in France. It was clear by the end of World War One that air power was an important military capability.

In January 1919 the Federal Government decided to form a separate air service. The RAAF, formed on the 31st of March 1921, was the second professional air force in the world, established three years later than the British Royal Air Force. The Prime Minister, Billy Hughes, saw the benefits of airpower in the defence of the coastline, supporting the creation of the RAAF.

The first aerial circumnavigation of the Australian coastline was made from Point Cook in May 1924 by RAAF personnel Goble and McIntyre. Five years earlier, in 1919, the first north-south crossing of the continent had been achieved by a BE-2e and pilots from Point Cook, in the search for a suitable landing ground for Australian aviators Ross and Keith Smith. Connections with civilian aviation were

(a) continued	reinforced in 1929 when Charles Kingsford-Smith took off from Point Cook in the Southern Cross, for the first non-stop, east -west crossing of the continent. With the outbreak of war in September 1939, RAAF Base Point Cook became the focus of RAAF training in Australia, a role it maintained until the 1990s. RAAF Base Point Cook is recognised as the oldest military aviation base in Australia serving between 1914 and 1992. Aspects of the base, which illustrate its long service and origins, include the planning and layout of the base prior to World War One, during the Inter-war period and during World Wars One and Two, as well as individual buildings and suites of buildings.
(b) the place has outstanding heritage value to the nation because of the place's possession of uncommon, rare or endangered aspects of Australia's natural or cultural history.	RAAF Base Point Cook is the only remaining World War One military airfield complex in Australia and features the oldest, most extensive complex of military aviation buildings in Australia. The master plan, designed in 1917, and implemented from 1918 under J. S. Murdoch, first Commonwealth Architect, was seminal in Australia and would influence the planning and development of later military aviation bases in Australia. Together, the planning, layout and built fabric comprise the only example of a military air base associated with the major periods of development of the RAAF: pre World War One, World War One, Inter-war and World War Two. The base includes uncommon examples of building types specific to each of these periods. In particular the fabric of the base includes examples of the oldest hangars (Bldgs 95, 104 and 210 erected 1914-1917) and workshops, military or civilian, in Australia. The Australian Flying Corps complex on the Southern Tarmac area, including the seaplane jetty (Bldg 108 erected 1916-1937), the water-plane hangar of 1914 and the later 1920s seaplane complex, is recognized internationally as rare and as a whole the Point Cook air base is perhaps the only remaining relatively intact early military airfield in the world. This rarity is reinforced by the survival of early examples of staff housing, such as the Dalzeill Street group of housing (Bdlgs M004-006, M010 and M026 erected 1914-1915) and uncommon examples and groups of seminal, military aviation buildings of each of the major periods of development. Uncommon buildings of the Inter-war period include the Aeronautics School (Bldg 92 erected 1922), Base Squadron Headquarters (Bldg 87 erected 1929) and the Officers Mess (Bldg 33 erected in 1937). In particular the School of Instruction (Bldg 161 erected in 1940) is one of only three surviving examples, which, in conjunction with the unusually large number of Bellman Hangars (Bldgs 211-214 and 178-187 erected 1940), reinforces its significance as the focus of World War Two RAAF training activities.

Criterion	Values
(d) the place has outstanding heritage value to the nation because of the place's importance in demonstrating the principal characteristics of: (i) a class of Australia's natural or cultural places; or (ii) a class of Australia's natural or cultural environments.	RAAF Base Point Cook demonstrates the principal characteristics, including building types, planning and layout, which illustrate the development of military aviation bases in Australia during the pre-World War One, World War One, Inter-war and World War Two periods. The 1917 master plan for the base established the clear separation of functions required for military aviation. The dominant functional zones included the Southern (hangars and workshops) and Central (accommodation) Tarmac areas and the runway areas formalized in 1943. The administration and training areas were typically located between the early accommodation areas and the hangars and workshops, with a clearly articulated layout based on major and minor planning axes. The plantings of windbreak trees in the 1920s, in particular Cupressus species, created a landscape with both functional and formal values, with characteristics reflected in other military and aviation bases such as RAAF Base Richmond. The parade ground at Point Cook, completed in 1930, would become a prominent feature of later RAAF bases, as would the rows of prefabricated Bellman Hangars, erected during World War Two, at the interface with the runway and apron areas. These functional zones, landscape elements and features would be characteristic of RAAF bases erected between 1924 and 1945, their relationship depending on site parameters and operational requirements, including runway layout and orientation. The social hierarchy, way of life and organisation of the RAAF, are expressed in the location and range of accommodation types at Point Cook. These accommodation types would become characteristic of RAAF bases such as RAAF Base Richmond and had similarities with early accommodation at HMAS Cerberus and Duntroon College, the pre-WW1 Navy and Army equivalents to RAAF Base Point Cook. Of particular note are excellent representative examples of single-storey houses and two-storey weatherboard accommodation units (e.g. Bldgs 18, 23, 24, 27, 28, 29, 41, 42, 46, M011 and M001-002 erected from 1914-1939), in addition to examples of servant's quarters associated with the single officer's quarters erected in 1918 (Bldg 22). At Point Cook, a range of building types demonstrate the role of the Commonwealth Architect's department in introducing high standards of design across sites associated with military activities. These generic standards continued into the post 1945 period (the National Service era which began in the 1950s), although little detailed information about these structures at RAAF base Point Cook and elsewhere is available.

Criterion	Values
(d) continued	Buildings and structures of particular interest, and which characterise the major periods of development, include: a) Pre-World War One and World War One; 18, 21, 22, 23, 30, 72, 81, 82, 95, 104, 108, 210, 488, M011, M004-006, M010, M026. b) Inter-war; 24, 27, 28, 29, 33, 34, 38, 41, 42, 46, 70, 71, 74, 86, 87, 88, 90, 91, 92, 93, 94, 96, 100, 101, 121, M00, M001-003, M007-009, M0027-0028, sentry boxes; and c) World War Two; 161, 178-187, 211-214 and the concrete runways of 1943. P-type, timber hutments illustrate the need for a considerable work force during the wartime years 1939-1945. These include buildings Nos 73, 110, 122, 155, 156, 158, 163, 176, 188, 190, 203, 221, 225, 228, 241-243, 259, 261, 277, 327-329, 427, 453, 455, 457, 458, 459, 481, 482 and 485.
(g) the place has outstanding heritage value to the nation because of the place's strong or special association with a particular community or cultural group for social, cultural or spiritual reasons.	RAAF Base Point Cook was the birthplace of the RAAF in 1921. The place has a special association with Australian RAAF personnel and veterans and as the core training complex for the Australian Flying Corps and RAAF from 1914 until 1992. As the longest continuously operating military air base in Australia, RAAF Base Point Cook has been collectively identified by the RAAF for its cultural values. In 1952 action was taken by the RAAF to establish an aviation museum at Point Cook. The museum provides research and restoration facilities for historic aircraft and is involved in commemorative events such as VP Day. Many of these functions are fostered through the services of volunteer staff, including former RAAF engineers and flight crew.
(h) the place has outstanding heritage value to the nation because of the place's special association with the life or works of a person, or group of persons, of importance in Australia's natural or cultural history.	RAAF Base Point Cook is important as a whole to RAAF personnel and ex-RAAF personnel as the first military aviation base in Australia and as the birthplace of the RAAF in 1921. In these roles, over almost an eighty-year period from 1914, RAAF Base Point Cook had a special association with Australian military forces as the focus of training for the Australian air force. Candidates Richard Williams and Thomas Walter White, two of the four who graduated from the first training course, which began in August 1914, saw service in the Middle East during World War One in the Australian Flying Corps and are noted for their distinguished service and special association with RAAF Base Point Cook. Williams is known as the father of the RAAF, formed in March 1921, for his efforts in promoting air power in Australia's defence. White, captured by the Turks in 1915 and escaping via Russia in 1918, continued his association with the military, writing Sky Saga, a Story of Empire Airmen in the Second World War. In 1949, White was appointed Minister for Air and Civil Aviation in the Menzies Government.

- an addition to authorise the operation of short-range low power transmitters using analogue modulation techniques in the 5.8 GHz band for Industrial, Scientific and Medical applications;
- an expansion of the currently licensed 60 GHz bandwidth to authorise two types of wireless services as follows:
 - (a) an amendment to support the operation of short range broadband wireless communications service outdoors in the 59-63 GHz band; and
 - (b) an addition to support the operation of WPAN services in indoor environments in the 57-66 GHz band;

- an amendment to the extend the limitations of wireless audio transmitters to include datacasting stations;
- an amendment to increase the maximum EIRP for operation of biomedical telemetry transmitters;
- an amendment to permit additional operating frequency bands for transmitters used in underground communications;
- an amendment to permit additional operating frequency bands for radiodetermination transmitters operated in radiofrequency-shielded enclosures;
- an amendment to extend the 5 GHz band for RLAN access and insert a monitoring requirement in the limitations;
- an amendment to increase the permitted frequency band of operation for medical implant communications transmitters; and
- an amendment to increase the permitted frequency band of operation for medical implant telemetry transmitters.

The Radiocommunications (Infrared Devices) Class Licence 2002 (the Infrared Class Licence) authorises the operation of devices that transmit infrared energy for radiocommunications purposes over short ranges.

ACMA proposes to revoke the Infrared Class Licence and insert a new item for infrared transmitters and their conditions of use into the LIPD Class Licence.

1. I, John Howard, Prime Minister, being of the opinion that it is necessary to do so because of exceptional circumstances, hereby determine that the remuneration and other conditions of employment of the Mersey Hospital APS employees:
 - a) are not determined under the Department of Health and Ageing Collective Agreement 2007-2010, the preserved Australian Pay and Classification Scale derived from the Australian Public Service Award 1998 or the Australian Public Service Award 1998; and
 - b) shall be the same remuneration and other conditions of employment that the employee enjoyed as a Tasmanian State Service employee performing duties at Mersey Campus of the North West Regional Hospital, Tasmania immediately before becoming an APS employee other than those terms and conditions to which the employees are entitled under Commonwealth law; or
 - c) if the Mersey Hospital APS Employee was not previously employed in the Tasmanian State Service, shall be the remuneration and other conditions of employment that he or she would have enjoyed as a Tasmanian State Service employee performing the same duties at Mersey Campus of the North West Regional Hospital, Tasmania other than those terms and conditions to which the employee is entitled under Commonwealth law.
2. In this Determination:

"Mersey Hospital APS Employees" means those APS employees in the Department of Health and Ageing who perform duties in the Mersey Hospital, Tasmania.
3. The reference in clause 1.b) of this Determination to 'same remuneration and other conditions of employment that the employee enjoyed as a Tasmanian State Service employee performing duties at Mersey Campus of the North West Regional Hospital, Tasmania' shall be taken as including a reference to any additional, increased or improved remuneration and other conditions of employment that the employee would otherwise be entitled to had the employee remained as an employee or been engaged as an employee any time up until and including 30 June 2008.

Dated this 30 day of October 2007
